Subject: Re: [#108164] Re: GitHub Patchwork Event

Hector,

My name is Patrick Conant - I can attend tonight, as can my business partner, Jesse Michel. We are both former co-captains of Code for Asheville, and our company, PRC Applications, dedicates over 20% of our time towards civic technology projects.Â

We'd be happy to do a lightning talk on how Git and Github have supported our efforts in civic technology and open source software, both with Code for Asheville and at PRC Apps.Â

One project that I'd like to highlight is NC Megaphone, as it's a simple project that has made a big impact in our state - and it's also hosted on Github pages:Â

We probably won't be able to stay all the way until 9:30pm, but can participate in the event.

Thank you,

Patrick Conant

Would you be interested in giving a 15-20 minute talk on how you got started in open source? The goal of Patchwork is not only to ease beginners into the world of Git/GitHub, but also to encourage them to contribute to open source if they haven't before. Hearing your story and your unique insight into the open source world would be inspirational and informative, and we'd be honored if you felt like sharing it with the attendees. We have room for two lightning talks if two individuals are available to speak about the organization, or a specific open source project you're working on.
